U.S. District Court and Magistrate Judges meet with RBA's

interactions with each other and with the Court, and he feels the same way about the judges in the Richmond Division (E.D. Va.). He regularly sees practitioners act as both friends and cordial adversaries, and that is part of what makes him proud to sit on the local bench.

Judge Hudson attributes the continued decline in the number of civil trials, in part, to that dynamic. In the past three years, he has presided over only one civil trial. While several factors might account for that trend, he feels that positive relationships among local practitioners are encouraging more constructive settlement discussions shortly after litigation is filed. Judge Hudson has received an increasing number of requests for early mediation in recent years—something he encourages.

Generally speaking, Judge Hudson is impressed by the caliber and work quality of the attorneys who practice before him. The briefs he sees are typically well written, and the Clerk's Office reports broad adherence to the Local Rules, with most violations being inadvertent and easily corrected.

The most common issue Judge Hudson sees with out-of-state attorneys who appear in the E.D. Va. pro hac vice is lack of familiarity with—and often surprise by—the fast pace of the “Rocket Docket.” He urges out-of-state attorneys to associate with good local counsel who can guide them on all facets of local practice.

Although Judge Hudson strives to keep his docket progressing efficiently and has a standard pre-trial scheduling order, he grants counsel some flexibility and latitude to modify discovery schedules to fit the circumstances of a given case. Counsel can negotiate and submit agreed-upon scheduling orders, but Judge Hudson will always review them to ensure that they are both fair and realistic, and that they allow the Court sufficient time to resolve summary judgment motions before trial (typically at least three or four weeks).

Judge Hudson urges more lawyers to get involved in pro bono work. With trial opportunities so diminished these days, he views pro bono matters as one of the best ways for younger practitioners to develop and sharpen their legal skills through motions practice, oral argument, and occasionally trial.

The Honorable John A. Gibney, Jr.

Judge Gibney reports that the Richmond Bar is very cooperative, very well prepared, and generally do a very good job for their clients.

When asked about problem areas, Judge Gibney noted some recent concerns regarding discovery disputes, stating that attorneys should not try to circumvent discovery rulings by asking for the same information in a different manner. Judge Gibney does not typically refer discovery matters to the magistrate judges. Upon receipt of a discovery motion, he will typically request that counsel have a conference call with him to discuss the dispute, or if he is able to understand the root of the problem, Judge Gibney often will enter orders immediately.

Judge Gibney advises young lawyers to consult with lawyers with federal trial experience. In discussing the vanishing opportunities for young lawyers to try cases, he encourages young lawyer to get their names on the court-appointed list so that they may gain that trial experience.

In discussing motions practice, Judge Gibney noted at the time of oral argument, he has read the briefs submitted by counsel, identified the issues that trouble him, knows what he wants counsel to address during argument. He stated that a good starting point for any argument before him is to ask what questions the Court has regarding the parties' positions. Additionally, he noted that counsel should not be married to their oral argument script or PowerPoint and should listen to and answer his questions.

Judge Gibney believes the Court's technology aid the trial process. By way of example, he has witnessed effective PowerPoint presentations in counsel's openings and closings and the use of technology to display exhibits while examining witnesses. He stated that attorneys can make an appointment with his courtroom clerk to learn about the various technologies available to them in the courtroom.

Lastly, Judge Gibney invites lawyers to come and see him. If lawyers are having a problem, they should let him know so that he can help solve it. He also is willing to provide feedback to counsel and welcomes feedback from those practicing before him. While he may have “the best job,” Judge Gibney does appreciate hearing from the bar as to how he is performing.

The Honorable M. Hannah Lauck

Judge Lauck shared her observations that the federal bar places a premium on civility and professionalism. The best advice Judge Lauck would give any young lawyer is to focus on preparation and remember that the most effective advocates are courteous and professional at all times. For young lawyers, Judge Lauck recognizes that the scheduling deadlines and fast pace of litigation in the Rocket Docket can be daunting, but it is important to recognize that the Court accepts consent motions for extensions of time. She shared that she is always willing to consider providing additional time for good cause as long as the trial or summary judgment dates are not being moved and the case is otherwise staying on track.

Contrary to its somewhat intimidating reputation among those who are new to the Bar or have not practiced here, the Rocket Docket is an excellent place to practice law and enjoys a high level of civility and professionalism. For example, the inordinate motions practice often seen in other courts around the country is rare. Perhaps because of the fast track case schedule, she rarely sees litigation for litigation sake, as most counsel simply do not have the time to file frivolous motions or pursue collateral matters. This scheduling and case management discipline forces the parties to quickly identify the seminal issues in dispute and to focus on those issues only. As a result, litigants in the Eastern District avoid the often crushing motions practice often pursued in other courts.

Judge Lauck shared that while not every motion requires oral argument, she is interested in ensuring that young lawyers continue to have the opportunity to engage in oral argument before the Court. To that end, Judge Lauck is considering adding a provision to her standard pretrial order to allow for the opportunity for oral argument in non-dispositive motions that might not otherwise require oral argument, provided that the firm notes that one of its associates would appreciate the opportunity for oral argument. If a firm is willing to say that a junior associate seeks the opportunity for oral argument, she would like to afford that opportunity to counsel.

Another observation regarding new practitioners in the Court is the occasional lapse into citing or relying on the Virginia Rules of

Administration of Justice Committee members

Civil Procedure. Young lawyers starting out in the Eastern District should also focus on citing precedent within this District and the Fourth Circuit before invoking state court decisions or decisions from other district courts around the country.

A cautionary reminder for all counsel, particularly if you are engaged as local counsel by another law firm located out of state, is to ensure that lead counsel participates in pretrial conferences and Court ordered mediations. Judge Lauck all too often finds local counsel arriving alone for pretrial conferences and unable to address key issues in the case due to the absence of the lead decision maker. If lead counsel cannot attend the pretrial conference in person due to a conflict and for good cause, then the Judge may consider participation by teleconference. By the same token, it is critical that attorneys bring their clients to all Court ordered mediations. If the decision maker is not there to hear from the other party and the magistrate judge, the case has little chance of settling. Client participation in mediation is mandatory, and almost always results in the case either being resolved or at least narrowed to the seminal issues in dispute. Judge Lauck sees a high percentage of cases settle at mediation, but even if a case does not settle, mediation helps the parties focus on the case and focus on the same issues. At worse, mediation helps everyone prepare for trial and identify the issues that are pushing them into litigation.

Finally, Judge Lauck wanted to remind the Bar, particularly civil practitioners, of the value of Court appointed work. It is an important public service and can be helpful for civil litigants to understand the criminal process. Ironically, some of the more dramatic briefing surfaces in civil cases, and not criminal cases, despite the more significant stakes posed by the criminal docket.

The Honorable David J. Novak

Judge Novak continues to be impressed with the professionalism and caliber of the members of the Richmond Bar practicing before him. Judge Novak often relies on members of the Richmond Bar, as local counsel, to advise counsel from other jurisdictions on the expectations of the Court regarding collegiality and cooperation.

Judge Novak expressed the Court's expectation that the parties resolve discovery disputes without filing motions and without Court involvement. He believes that, generally, there are only two areas that may legitimately warrant Court involvement, and only after attempts to meet and confer in good faith: (1) disagreements regarding sincere assertions of privilege; and (2) issues related to discovery of significant volumes of electronically stored information. To facilitate cooperation and compromise on discovery disputes, Judge Novak, through his scheduling order, encourages—but does not mandate—that the parties submit any disputes to the Court through a joint motion not to exceed twenty pages. He believes that, through the process of drafting a joint submission to the Court, the parties are often able to reach an agreement regarding their dispute, or at least narrow the issues in dispute. If the parties insist on filing separate pleadings, however, they are limited to just seven pages.

Judge Novak, along with his colleague Judge Young, has recently instituted two important changes to his Order Regarding Procedures for Settlement Conferences. First, not later than one week before the settlement conference, counsel for the plaintiff is required to tender a settlement offer to counsel for the defendant. Counsel for the defendant must respond either accepting the offer or with a counter-offer not less than four days before the conference. Judge Novak has found this new procedure helpful in resolving disputes. Second, the Court has reached an agreement with the Virginia Office of the Attorney General (the “OAG”) whereby a personal injury plaintiff is required to attempt to negotiate any reduction in liens for past medical treatment prior to the settlement conference. If unsuccessful, the Order allows the OAG to participate in the settlement conference, either in person or by telephone, to further address the reduction of any lien. As medical liens are a common roadblock to successful resolution of personal injury suits, this provision has been beneficial to the Court in resolving disputes through settlement conferences.

The Honorable Roderick C. Young

Judge Young is generally pleased with the caliber of the attorneys that appear before him from the Richmond Bar. He states that for the most part they are well prepared and familiar with his practices and the rules of Court. Judge Young believes the best way for young lawyers to learn their way around any courtroom is to get experience in a courtroom and to learn from more experienced practitioners.

Judge Young recommends that attorneys come to his courtroom prepared. While an attorney may not be able to pick or control his or her client or the particular facts of a case, an attorney can know the law and be prepared. The better you know your case, the better you can explain your case to the Court. He also recommends that attorneys always bring any controlling rules or statutes to the hearing, even when a case may seem routine, as wrinkles and nuances can arise in any case.

Judge Young stated that occasionally attorneys will contact chambers with questions that are clearly addressed in the court's pre-trial order. He encourages attorneys to read and learn the pre-trial order, as it provides much of the information needed to proceed in his courtroom.

Judge Young cautions attorneys regarding the bringing of discovery motions. He believes that counsel for both sides should be able to work out most discovery disputes between them without resorting to motions practice. Where possible, he attempts to assist the parties in resolving discovery disputes without a court ruling.

Pro se education pamphlets available

The latest version of the RBA's pro se education pamphlets, “Your Guide to Civil Litigation in General District Court” and “Your Guide to Landlord-Tenant Disputes,” are now available. These pamphlets, which were produced by the Bar's Pro Bono Committee, are available in both English and Spanish and are designed to help a pro se litigant understand the basic rules and procedures of civil litigation in the General District Court.

The pamphlets are provided free of charge to court personnel, law enforcement officials, legal aid societies, libraries, and other not-for-profit organizations. They are also available on the RBA website at <http://www.richmondbar.org/court-rulesresources/pro-bono-resources/>.

The Association appreciates WilliamsMullen for its generosity in providing the printing of the pamphlets.

Volunteers needed for RBA lawyer Mentoring Program

The Richmond Bar is looking for a few good men and women to serve as mentors. The Mentoring Program is designed to assist less experienced attorneys in acquiring the practical skills necessary to become effective members of the bar. The program matches Association volunteers who have practiced law a decade or longer with attorneys having less than seven years of experience. Mentors serve one-year terms during which they agree to have at least one face-to-face meeting with the participant with whom they are paired and to be available during regular business hours for brief telephone consultations. Mentors are called upon to offer advice on a variety of issues important to lawyers just starting their practice. The program gives newer attorneys an avenue for asking questions about the practical aspects of practicing law, such as law office management, malpractice insurance, local court customs and ethical obligations.

A Mentor Volunteer Application can be downloaded at http://www.richmondbar.org/wp-content/uploads/2013/07/mentor_application.pdf. You may also call the Bar office at 780-0700 to request an application.

attorneys with nonprofit corporations in need of legal representation. This virtual law firm of 350 attorneys from 75 different law firms and corporate legal departments assists nonprofits each year with a variety of transactional legal matters, like personnel issues, contract negotiations, bylaw review, mergers and intellectual property issues, so nonprofits can focus more of their resources on their charitable purpose. Since its inception in 2001, the Clearinghouse volunteers have provided pro bono legal assistance to 528 nonprofit organizations in 879 distinct attorney referrals resulting in volunteer legal services valued conservatively at over $2,300,000.

A lawyer nominating the Clearinghouse writes, "I served on the Richmond Bar Association's Pro Bono Committee in the early 1990's. My co-committee member, Brian Marron, a real estate and corporate lawyer, developed the idea for a better way for the Richmond Bar to support non-profits. The Clearinghouse concept was large and vital, and in 2001 the Greater Richmond Bar Foundation, with Brian's leadership, agreed to develop and expand the Clearinghouse as a region-wide project of all affiliated bar associations.

The Pro Bono Clearinghouse is one of those rare efforts to target opportunities for lawyers to serve the corporate and transactional legal needs of charities-in essence it organizes a single-point-of contact for general counsel services to these non-profit organizations that are a lifeline to the underprivileged.

I cannot think of a more enduring and comprehensive example than the Clearinghouse of a community taking one lawyer's idea and using it as a vessel to channel 350 lawyers' skills and services efficiently to the point of need."
